One of the things that I hear people complain about when referring to Word is that it's just "too hard" to make a good-looking template. I've been running Word for around 10 years now, and I must say that I'm finally starting to grasp the basics of how Word works. So I thought it would be a good idea to write down some tips for those people who're not familiar with Word and are struggling with basic things like reusing fonts, adding styles to text, and formatting bullets and pictures. So let's jump right in and take a look at how you make a Word document. First, there are a few basics that everyone should know. You can change the size and font of the text in your document just by selecting the text and right-clicking and changing the properties. You can also right-click on a picture and select "Format Picture" and then you can change the size and font of that picture just like you change the size and font of text. If you want to change the size or font of every picture in a document, you have to do it manually. Luckily, there are two tools that are very useful for this. One is called Picture Tools and the other is called Picture Options. There are a few different ways to use the Picture Tools, but I'm going to focus on the most basic way. Press Ctrl+T on your keyboard to bring up the "Text Box". Now you can resize or move the picture, and add a few different effects to the picture to make it shine. In the next section I'll go over some of the more advanced features, like adding borders and changing the picture to a square format. But for now we're going to focus on adding a few different effects to your picture. Select your picture by double clicking on it. Now you can right-click on the picture and select 82157476af
